

ONLY WISH OF HERO-TEAM WHICH GIRDLED GLOBE IN 8 DAYS, 15 HOURS, 51 MINUTES, IS TO OBTAIN SOME "SERIOUS SLEEPING;" WORLD GIVES THEM ACCLAIM

Wily Post and Harold Gatty, Who Made Merry-Go-Round of World, Only Ask for Respite from the Cheers and Rip-
Roaring Welcome—Modest Over Achievement

By DAVID P. SENTNER
(International News Service Staff Correspondent)

New York, July 2.—Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, aerial boomerangs, who sprinted around the world in 8 days, 15 hours and 51 minutes, today wanted to sleep but fame was knocking on their door.

They had knocked the record for girdling the globe into smithereens. The Graf Zeppelin had done it in 22 days.

Averaging a flying speed of more than 150 miles an hour, they had made a merry-go-round out of the world we live in astride their flashing plane, the "Winnie Mae."

Around the world like a clock—15,000 miles—ticking
from New York to Harbor Grace to Chester, England; Hanover, Germany; Berlin, Moscow, Siberia, Alaska, Edmonton, Cleveland and home again to New York. Over two oceans, jagged mountain ranges, arid deserts, unseen lands and untouched clouds, the cream-colored monoplane streaked to glory under the scientific whip of a one-time Oklahoma farmer for pilot and a lean Australian as navigator. Mercury had only wings on his heels.

"We just got fifteen hours' sleep
during the flight," said Post. "Now we'll do some serious sleeping."
(Post told a pal confidentially it was only seven hours.)

Serious sleeping! A couple of optimistic heroes!

The buzz that rose to the skies after the world-girdlers shot their plane to earth at Roosevelt Field a 8:47 p. m.
grew to a national roar of acclamation as the sun rose today.

Reception committees, interviewers, photographers, radio broadcasters did not let the nine-day flying wonders fall into bed until 2 a. m. This morning, and at 10 a. m., the rip-roaring official welcome of New York was scheduled to begin—a boat ride down
the harbor, a parade to City Hall, luncheon dinner, and mob hysterics.

To hear those boys talk about their trip you'd think they had only flown across the Hudson River.

"We didn't have much trouble," said
Post. "It came out just as we expected."

"It was a little tough crossing the Atlantic and shooting across the Bering Sea to Nome, Alaska. On that leg we had a lot of thick weather and storms and couldn't see where we were going."

"At Khabarovsk, Siberia, we got some bad Russian oil in our motors and it fouled the spark-plugs. That held us up, otherwise we would have been here much sooner."

"How was the scenery? I didn't look. It was all just like flying over Oklahoma."

A lone blue-white plane with history written all over it streaked out of the West as a pink and purple sky was beginning to turn into black night.

The Winnie Mae banked twice around the field as 15,000 persons yelled and vibrated.

The round-the-world plane had barely finished a perfect landing when the riot was on.

Fourteen-Year-Old Girl Drowns in Lake at Park

LANGHORNE, July 2.—Rose Guw-ronski, 14 years old, of 2247 East Coral street, Philadelphia, was drowned in the lake at Penn Valley Park, on the Lincoln Highway, near here, yesterday afternoon when she became exhausted
while swimming in deep water.

The child, who was not regarded as a strong swimmer, sank with fear and exhaustion after she had paddled beyond her depth. Walter F. Coates, 25, of 5039 Jackson street, Philadelphia, who was bathing nearby, heard the child scream for help and swam to the spot where she disappeared.

He located the body within three minutes and pulled the girl to the shore. Two doctors from the Byberry

but the child failed to respond to

MULCTING THE MOTORISTS

Florida is fighting a temptation that is strong upon every other state and upon the Federal Government. Facing a shortage of state revenue, her executive and legislative branches would lay violent hands upon the goose that lays the golden egg.

Only opposition in the lower branch of the legislature prevented the levying of an eight-cent gasoline tax upon motor operators and auto tourists in the state. A one-third increase in the motor license fees passed.

Florida, Georgia and South Carolina now collect an impost of six cents a gallon on gasoline. Arizona, Oklahoma and North Dakota boosted theirs from four to five cents this year. Seventeen other states attempted to raise their gasoline taxes this year, although some of them levy a tax of five cents per gallon.

In taxes, as in everything else, the tendency among lawmakers is to spoil a good thing. When gasoline tax money was all used for highway construction and maintenance and the taxes were nominal there was no complaint from the motorists, although they were already paying heavy license fees. But there is a limit to what even the motoring public will bear, and when that limit is passed the reaction is often strong enough to sweep everything before it.

Excessive taxation has killed many lucrative sources of public revenue and it can do as much for the gas tax. It can be argued that the American people will buy gasoline when they have money for nothing else, but there is a possibility of milking the patient cow dry.

PERENNIAL PENSIONS

The United States government has just paid the last pension to the widows of the veterans of the War of 1812. One hundred and seventeen years after peace was declared, the last widow pensioned because of that campaign is dead.

That war placed few veterans and veterans' widows on the pension list, compared with the Civil and World wars, yet the cost to the country's taxpayers was stupendous. Small pensions, multiplied many times, reach vast proportions over a period of more than a century.

But if the pension cost of the War of 1812 was to be reckoned with, what of the cost of the World War? Hundreds of millions have been appropriated for the relief of disabled veterans and their dependents, for bonuses, insurance and adjusted compensation. The cost this year alone will exceed a billion dollars.

Nor is the end here. There will be disabled veterans and dependents to be cared for until the last quarter of the present century. The adjusted compensation will be a drain upon the public coffers for years to come. And there is a movement afoot to place all World War veterans, widows and dependents upon a new and longer pension list.

The monetary cost of the World War to the United States is not to be counted in munitions.

The egotist is always the other person.

Travers Lorrimer, shell-shocked war veteran and son of wealthy Margaret Lorrimer, mistakes pretty Mary Lou Thurston for Delight Hartford, whom he is supposed to have married in England. Mrs. Lorrimer induces Mary Lou to assume the role of Delight, of whom no trace can be found. Travers is told he must begin again with friendship. His interest in life is renewed. No mention is made of his marriage until the visit of Larry Mitchell, Mary Lou's friend. Then Travers, believing Larry is in love with Mary Lou, reminds her she is his wife. At Christmas Mary Lou, irritated by Travers' lack of holiday spirit, terms him selfish. Brought to his senses, he joins his mother and Mary Lou in delivering gifts to the needy. At the Veterans' Hospital Travers meets his old buddy Jimmy McEwan, and plans to help him. Travers gives Mary Lou a sapphire ring and speaks of the seal ring he gave her. Mary Lou believes then that he really married Delight, using a seal ring. That night he kisses Mary Lou. Realizing she loves him and cannot go on pretending, Mary Lou plans to leave. Later she changes her mind. Mrs. Lorrimer remarks the change in Mary Lou to Dr. Mathews, who tells her he believes Mary Lou loves Travers. Mary Lou confides in Larry. Larry is in love with Jenny Wynne, a friend of the Lorrimeres. Travers calls Mary Lou "Dearest" and she rushes to her room in tears. Travers sends McEwan to a splendid Lake Placid sanatorium.

CHAPTER XXX.

MUCH that he had forced to the back of his mind, things which lay buried in his subconscious mind, were, perforce, dragged to the sunlight, mulled over, discussed, commented upon.

For Mac, invalidated all these years, by reason of his lameness and the gasped lungs, had had little in the way of a future to look forward to; had become reconciled to a slow death, and lived, almost exclusively, in his memory of those brief and action-cramped years, into which he had packed, it seemed, his entire life. Mac looked backward—with clear, rather humorous and quite unselfish eyes.

"It was a great war while it lasted," Mac said.

Mutual Understanding.

His conversation, therefore, while with Lorrimer, turned for the most part upon the events through which they, mutually, had lived. And Lorrimer had to listen, had to talk, and so came gradually to unburden himself of much that had been festering in his mind, eating at the frayed edges of his nerves, sinking through his thoughts, the dark, starved rats of unbelieved memory.

And thus, playing his part with a metaphorically bitten lip and a stiffened spine, Lorrimer came to find laughter again in memories, and pity and a healing loss of self.

After leaving Mac at the sanatorium, the Lorrimeres and Mary Lou went on to Placid, where they had two glorious weeks of winter sport. Mary Lou had not bob-sledded, skated, skied and snowshoed in high, glorious mountain air since her college days, when, for a short time, she and her parents had been at St. Moritz, in Switzerland.

flaming with satisfaction, having combined business with pleasure in persuading his editor to allow him to do a special article upon the winter antics of the fortunate rich, to be read by shivering stenographers and clerks clinging to straps in the subway trains which propelled them to their business of earning a living.

He had obtained the press agent job, he told Mary Lou, which was to exploit an English revue, coming to town in the early Spring. He didn't, he confessed, grinning, know much about specialized publicity, but he thought that he could manage to see that the star's jewels were stolen or her pet dog afflicted with pneumonia. Anyway, from what he had already learned, publicity would come easily. One of the girls in the company had a title, or so she said she had; a juvenile lead was the disinherited son of a great shipbuilder, and one of the chorus or show girls had been married to no less than three lords—not all at the same time.

"There was a woman once," explained Larry to Jenny, Mary Lou and Travers, "who married a couple of dukes. They called her the double duchess. How about this one being a triple lady? Sounds like a triple bromide, but maybe it will catch on!"

An Incentive to Win

He was in high spirits. Jenny was kind, and even if he didn't know much about skiing and fell ingloriously upon his nose and stuck in snowbanks, long legs waving, her laughter was entirely friendly and she took great pains to instruct him in the various difficult sports. Also he was now writing signed special articles for his paper, and had sold the first of a series of short stories on newspaper life to a popular weekly and expected to sell many more—and his bank account had swelled gorgeously.

He had always been ambitious, but had never taken himself very seriously. Mary Lou had been his closest confidante, a pink and interested ear into which he would pour the varied colored tales of his experiences and hopes. But in Jenny he had an incentive, a spur to performance.

Her laughing ladyship kept her own counsel. What Jenny thought of Larry and his importunities, his disarming impertinences, his obvious enchantment, was nobody's business but Jenny's. So her friends watched the little comedy, smiling, and no one interfered, not even the very wise parents, who had met Larry and liked him and who, contrary to current ideas about people of means and position, desired nothing more—nor less—for their only daughter than her happiness. So if Larry proved to be her happiness she could have him and they would make him very welcome.

But Jenny said nothing. Only her amber yellow curls danced about her pointed face with increased vitality, it seemed, and her eyes danced, too, and she was alternately serious and absurd, but she remained kind to her besotted swain, which was more than she usually did for one in his condition.

Mary Lou was not happy, but Mary Lou was permitting herself to drift. For one entirely dreadful moment, that Winter's afternoon in the library when she and Lorrimer had come in from skating and looked at the books together—and at each other—she had been sickeningly afraid that he had guessed the stark, wonderful and yet terrible fact which she had tried so hard to conceal.

But he had made no gesture and said no word, and she had begun to believe that the recognition which she had fancied she saw in his eyes had been a figment of her overstimulated imagination. If anything, things had been easier for her since then. Lorrimer had seemed light-hearted, interested in matters other than herself, in McEwan, in his own now vigorous routine, in the complicated running of a big place like Westwood, and was talking quite seriously of going to work, of taking his place in the office in New York which ran his father's estate—a complete business of renting, leasing and investing in itself. He had talked it over with Dr. Mathews and Mathews had agreed with one reservation.

"Fine! The very best thing you can do," he had said. "But give yourself until the Autumn. You are in perfectly good health, as far as I can judge, but I don't want you to plunge into office work, with all its confining conditions, rush and general expenditure of energy, too soon. Give your nerves a chance to get a padding of sound, firm flesh; get a few more solid pounds on those big bones of yours. Get lots of sleep and exercise and by Fall we'll have you fit to lick Dempsey in his prime. And then I'll wash my hands of you medically and discharge you as a patient, I hope, for good."

Lorrimer had consented. He was, in point of fact, seriously anxious to be with Mary Lou as much as possible for little while longer, feeling, as he did, that the resistance he laid to pride would wear down and that by the time Autumn came all misunderstandings and withholdings would have vanished between them and she would come to keep her promise to him. "And then," thought Lorrimer, exultant, "I'll have everything—everything!"

Perfect Happiness.

If these dreams of his came true he was perfectly right. Health and work, home and friends, wife and love; no man can have more, and many have a good deal less.

The Lorrimer party returned to Westwood House presently, and Lorrimer, with his increased interest in life in general and business in particular, began to confer with his mother over the routine of the place, and to see occasionally, both in town and at home, the manager of the Lorrimer estate, John Kent. He and Mary Lou read evenings, listened to the radio—which had never, until recently, afforded him anything but exasperation—and now and then went to town for a matinee or an evening play. He was an absolutely different man from the man who had come into the morning room that day in early November.

In a sense, Mary Lou couldn't understand it; the change was so great and the time had been so short. She spoke to Mathews about it and he laughed at her, in his friendly fashion.

"But he wasn't ill, not really," said Mathews. "His constitution was perfectly sound. He needed merely—an interest in life. That, you have given him, my dear. And the rest followed naturally, the building up of a run-down physique and the healing of sick nerves. He could have gone on in that other half-invalid state indefinitely; we could do nothing; he had to be taken out of himself, voluntarily. He needed the will to live, the will to be well. He'll not backslide now, I think; but we have to watch out a little. These old fits of depression, have you noticed that they have bothered him at all?"

"No, not recently," she told him.

Behind the Scene in Hollywood

By HARRISON CARROLL.
Copyright, 1931, Premier Syndicate, Inc.
HOLLYWOOD, Cal., June 30.—

At last Anita Page is to get a chance at a real part again. Not since "Our Blushing Brides" has she been given anything out of the ordinary, but now she is to blossom out as one of the leads in "Boarding School Girls."

Although it is patterned after "Our Dancing Daughters," and "Our Modern Maidens" in that it features a set of modern girls, it tells of a younger and less sophisticated type of girl. Credits for the story are not available, as several writers have contributed to the original idea. The director will be Harry Pollard who, until a short time ago, spent all of his time aboard boats directing Robert Montgomery's first starring picture.

Anita's career has been a peculiar one. When she first entered pictures she was skyrocketed toward the top, but of late seems to have been marking time with only an occasional part. However, with the assignment in "Boarding School Girls," she appears to be climbing again.

WITHOUT MUSIC. John Farrow tells this one about a former prominent director and his wife having a tiff while awaiting lunch in a studio cafe. She was grumbling because they were unable to afford the luxuries of former days. "Now we eat with the hams," she bellowed. "All right! All right!" he snapped back. "You can't have a brass band everywhere you go."

"Oh yes, I can," she replied bitterly. "I've got it now—on my finger."

LATEST GOSSIP.

Bill Boyd's dramatic rescue of people from a burning cruiser in mid-ocean the other day is not without its comedy. One of the men connected with the helpless boat is said to have refused to sell Bill insurance at one time. Speaking of boats Patsy Ruth Miller and her husband, Tay Garnett, were also stranded in the Catalina Channel recently. Drifting in their cruiser, they were spotted by a woman crossing on one of the large pleasure boats. Having seen Pat on the island, she recognized her by a pair of blue trousers she was wearing. She notified authorities and had help sent when she landed at the harbor. Since Radio has temporarily discontinued producing foreign versions, the Marquis De La Falaise is leaving for a vacation in Europe. He will be gone three months, then back to his directorial post. Jean Hersholt, who owned a majority of the stock issue in a camera concern, has sold his interest for his full investment plus 7 per cent. Another old-time favorite attempting a comeback is Helene Chadwick.

Keeping abreast of the times, M. G.-M. is writing an autogiro sequence into the airplane comedy, "Flying High," which is to star Bert Lahr. He will direct Lila Damita in "The Pickup." The story that appeared in this column stating that Richard Dix's last picture for Radio was to be "Frontier" has been changed again. The studio states that it would be impossible to put the story in script form before Dix's contract lapses. Instead they have purchased "Secret Service," a tale of Civil War days. This is his last if he does not resign with the organization.

ELEANOR BOARDMAN'S NEXT. If Paramount can successfully close the deal, the "Women In the Case" will be Eleanor Boardman's next picture.

As they are still in the negotiating stages no information is obtainable regarding the property other than that it is a play written by the late Clyde Fitch. Edward Goodman, who directed Miss Boardman and Paul Lukas in "Women Love Once" is scheduled to make this one. Goodman recently came from New York, where he has directed many stage productions. "An American Tragedy" was one of his outstanding pieces of work.

Eleanor Boardman.

BUDDY FAVORS NEW YORK.

Back from seven weeks of personal appearances, Buddy Rogers is boosting New York to the skies. However, after one breaks him down, he admits that the main reason is Harriet Lawe, who appeared in a featured spot in "America's Sweetheart." Buddy described her as a vivacious red-head and a great pal, but denies that there is anything serious in the way of a romance.

Work will cancel any thoughts of returning East that he might be entertaining. He is scheduled to appear opposite Carmen Barnes in "The Road to Reno," if and when they make the picture.

A sagging Arch Means the end of BEAUTY

Arch Preserver shoes were not named by lucky accident. The smart new Selby Arch Preservers we are now showing were designed for the woman of fashion who realizes the vital importance of preserving the arch.

The sagging arch means the end of beauty. It means lines of tiredness and age on your face. It means an awkward walk that destroys the beauty of everything you wear.

These famous Selby shoes had to be called Arch Preservers. They were designed to preserve your arch. Your youthfulness, your gracefulness, your smartness, too.

See them today. Most styles from $9.50 to $10.50.

It's this sagging that gradually breaks down your arches. The patented supporting construction, exclusive with Arch Preserver Shoes, prevents this, absolutely.
